Featuring

Attorney Paul Lehto

Paul Lehto is a former attorney in Washington state, practicing for 12 years in business law and consumer fraud. He is also a retired governor of the Washington State Bar Association and was voted "Rising Star" in 2003 and 2004 by Washington State Law and Politics magazine, and nominated as a "SuperLawyer" in 2005.

In January 2005, Lehto and Dr. Jeffrey Hoffman were co-authors of a significant paper entitled "Evidence of Election Irregularities in Snohomish County, Washington, General Election 2004" involving Sequoia touch screen "DRE" electronic voting machines. Data from the paper was later featured in Dr. Steve Freeman and Joel Bleifuss's book "Was the 2004 Presidential Election Stolen?"

Because Sequoia's claim of proprietary trade secrets and refusal to allow production of data and information regarding the 2004 election's vote counting processes thwarted further scientific investigational followup on some of the smoking gun aspects of the paper, Lehto and co-plaintiff John Wells filed a lawsuit seeking to void the purchase contract for the Sequoia electronic voting machines as an illegal contract, based on numerous public policy and state constitutional grounds.

These grounds revolve around the illegality of secret vote counting in democracy, and the inappropriateness of secrecy in general in the process of legitimate democratic elections. The relief sought includes declarations of law that trade secrets are not valid in elections, that democracy can not be outsourced in order to minimize or eliminate the public's rights, that the right to count votes can not be made secret and given to a single corporate party, and that the public's rights to know and observe elections are fundamental, non-waivable and non-delegable, and must be such in order for "government by the people" to exist.

In June 2007 the Court of Appeals dismissed the suit as "moot" on account of the public decision to remove Sequoia touch screens from use in polling places for the non-disabled in Snohomish County and on account of minor changes in the law.

And... The First South Florida Screening of the Explosive Documentary

Dan Rather Reports: "THE TROUBLE WITH TOUCH SCREENS"

Dan Rather Reports, <http://www.hd.net/drr227.html> presents conclusive evidence of the failure of touch screen voting machines across the country. The episode, "The Trouble with Touch Screens", is an entire hour devoted to new information on this story. From scientists involved in testing the equipment, to manufacturers in third world countries who shipped these defective voting machines to the United States, Dan Rather Reports presents new information showing that these defective machines may have altered the outcome of multiple elections.
